

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. We were always getting unwanted telephone calls from someone trying to see us something. One person went as far as calling us at 9:30 at night trying to sell us windows. At the time we lived in an apartment. It was late at the time of the call, but I was also taking care of a sick child. Now we don't get any unwanted telephone calls. I would say on an average we were getting 15 - 20 calls a week. They have gone down to 0. I do not think that The Federal Communications Commission should consider any proposal that could diminish the protections that we receive from Indiana's Telephone Privacy law.
